Plain answers.

What the ingredients are, and why anyone should care.

What are Botanicals?

A leaf from a Southeast Asian tree, brewed as tea or extracted into drinks. Vein colour tells you when it was picked — green balanced, white brighter, red heavier. It gives a bar a caffeine-free option that still does something, and gives a shop a category with repeat traffic.

What is MIT?

Mitragynine, the active compound. When a can says 45mg MIT, that's the dose. Higher number, stronger product — and a reason to stock more than one strength for the same customer.

What is kava?

A Pacific Island root, traditionally drunk socially. Calming rather than stimulating. It's the reason kava bars exist, and the easiest thing to put in the hand of a guest who isn't drinking.

What is yerba mate?

A caffeinated South American leaf, like tea. Clean lift, no kratom or kava in it. Covers the customer who wants energy without a botanical, so you don't lose the sale.

What are adaptogens?

Ashwagandha, reishi, ginseng — added alongside caffeine for balance. This is what the label-reading wellness shopper is looking for.

What is Lion's Mane?

A functional mushroom used for focus. Not psychoactive, not kratom. It's why the Odyssey line sells to people who'd never buy a kratom drink.

What is Hemp Derived?

A hemp-derived cannabinoid, regulated separately from kratom and kava. High margin where it's permitted — talk to your rep about compliance before you stock it.

What does lab tested mean?

Every batch checked by a third-party lab for identity, heavy metals and microbials. It's what lets you answer a customer's question with a document instead of a shrug.

Lab tested. Every batch.

Pure ingredients. Premium formulas. Proof on request.

Third-party verified

Identity, heavy metals and microbials, on every lot, before it reaches your shelf.

Certificates on request

Ask your rep for the COA on any batch you carry. Same day.

Sourced direct

Kratom and kava bought at origin, not through brokers.

Consistent lot to lot

The reason a regular gets the same drink twice.
